Preliminary measures for the initiation of the intensive Liberty loan campaign in Barre are being taken by men who were active in the first campaign and before long the movement for the sale of the bonds will be well under way. An attractive array of posters used successfully elsewhere in promoting the sale of the bonds and in arousing interest in the issue has been received in Barre and to-day C. W. Melcher, chairman, and Prin. H. L. Jackson of Spaulding high school, a member of the bank committee, were busily engaged in distributing the posters. The artist has done his work in colors and the result is a design that forcibly emphasizes the necessity of choosing between bonds and bondage.

Friends of Anselmo Rossi, a popular young man in the Italian colony of Barre, who was one of the first of Washington county's youths to join the new national army, are in receipt of postcard messages which indicate that he did not tarry long in the cantonment at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass. His military experience undoubtedly worked to his advantage in getting an early transfer and at last reports it looks as though he was bound for France with other soldiers. Mr. Rossi served for some time in the ranks of the Italian army and left Italy to settle in Barre with the rank of sergeant. Francis Paul is another Barre boy who was transferred to a more seasoned division of soldiers soon after his arrival in Ayer.

Two matters of more than passing importance are on the table for the consideration of the city fathers, but the board of aldermen at their regular meeting to-night will probably spend most of their time over routine business, of which there is a considerable accumulation. Announcement has not been made of any decision to pay all or any of the persons who appeared at the special hearing last week to show cause for demanding that the city pay part of the bills contracted during the quarantine period. For the timebeing, at least, there is a lull in traction activities, although signs are not wanting that the trolley people will renew their negotiations in the near future.
